"MOST histories of local congregations fudge their failures, embellish their successes, deal discreetly with their embarrassments and ensure that niceness triumphs over truth-telling. This one doesn't. The writers tell it like it is, or at least like it was: a major church set in the midst of Australia's oldest, biggest and spiritually most confused city trying to make sense of its setting and discern its calling. Be inspired by the story. Just occasionally, be appalled. Read of the Pitt Street congregation's journey to the brink of extinction and back again. Through it all, ask what, in their shoes, you might have done. For this struggle of years past has light to cast on our struggles today." David Gill
